Divinity is Immanent in All

"What is the form of an ant and what is the form of God? God is infinite. On the other hand, the ant is a tiny creature. From the physical point of view, there can be no comparison between the form of an ant and the form of God. However, from the spiritual point of view, Divinity is immanent in both. Ants though tiny in form, are able to acquire food, share it with friends and also store for future. Modern man, in spite of being endowed with intelligence, is frequently unable to make proper use of his intelligence. There is so much you can learn from ants, birds and animals! No living thing of this world can be devoid of the influence of Love. Love is your only true and eternal property. Share it, it will never diminish."

Questions for Introspection:

-  How does selfless service help us recognise and experience the feeling of Oneness with all living beings?
-  Do we experience the same love for all living beings such as insects, birds and animals as well as nature, as we do for human beings?
